Lincoln felt passionately that slavery was evil. When the repeal of the Missouri Compromise threatened to allow slavery to spread into the territories, he believed he had an obligation to fight it and re-entered the political arena.

Engage in some research to identify the personal qualities Lincoln developed during his lifetime that led him to act and made him so effective.

You don't need to be a Lincoln to make a difference. You need to care and you need to act.

About what wrong in need of righting, or what opportunity to make a difference, do you feel passionately enough to try to do something to make your community, your state, your country or even the world a better place? As you answer this question, compare and/or contrast the values that motivate you to those that motivated Lincoln.

Dear Teachers, Librarians, and Homeschool Instructors:

For the past five years, Hildene has sponsored the Lincoln Essay Competition focused on President Lincoln. It is open to all eighth graders in the state of Vermont, whether they enter as part of a class assignment or on their own. We hope this year's essay question will spark some great discussions and inspire written responses. Essays will be judged on the student's understanding of the subject, as well as her or his ability to convey that understanding through good writing.

Winners receive certificates and cash prizes, as follows:

First Place: $1,000

Second Place: $750

Third Place: $500

Plus up to ten Honorable Mentions: $200

This means that up to thirteen students can win prizes.

In addition, each winner is invited to an awards luncheon, along with their parents and teacher as our guests. In order to receive their checks and certificates, the first, second and third place winners must attend the luncheon and read their essays.

Please note: The deadline for the competition is Lincoln's Birthday, February 12, 2012. We hope this will give you ample time to work the content into your curriculum. All winners will be notified by the end of March. This year, the celebration will be at Hildene on Sunday, May 20, 2012, following a tour of The Lincoln Family Home.

We consider this competition to be one of the most important things we do. Not only does it reinforce the importance of research, critical analysis and good writing, but it also promotes awareness of civic responsibility using Lincoln's legacy as touchstone.

The following materials are enclosed: the essay topic and competition guidelines and an application form. We have also included the Assessment Rubric our judges will use which you and your students might find helpful. You may also download these from our website at www.hildene.org/schools.html. Please don't hesitate to call me if you or your students have any questions.

Sincerely,

Hildene, The Lincoln Family Home was the summer residence of Robert Todd Lincoln and his wife Mary Harlan Lincoln. Mr. Lincoln was the only child of President and Mary Todd Lincoln to survive to adulthood. Between 1905, when they moved in, and the death of their granddaughter Mary Lincoln Beckwith in 1975, more Lincolns (three successive generations) lived at Hildene than any other place in the United States. Our mission is to "advance the Lincoln legacy through education, commitment to community and active stewardship of the family's home and land."

THE QUESTION

Lincoln felt passionately that slavery was evil. When the repeal of the Missouri Compromise threatened to allow slavery to spread into the territories, he believed he had an obligation to fight it and re-entered the political arena.

Engage in some research to identify the personal qualities Lincoln developed during his lifetime that led him to act and made him so effective.

You don't need to be a Lincoln to make a difference. You need to care and you need to act.

About what wrong in need of righting, or what opportunity to make a difference, do you feel passionately enough to try to do something to make your community, your state, your country or even the world a better place? As you answer this question, compare and/or contrast the values that motivate you to those that motivated Lincoln.

Your Job: Research, think, and compose.

Read about Lincoln, from his early life to young adulthood; his time in the Illinois legislature and his term in Congress; his time as a lawyer, his re-entry into politics following the repeal of the Missouri Compromise and his time as president. Think about the qualities that brought him from abject poverty to the presidency. An example of this might be his determination to make something of himself, but there is much more. Think about the value system under which he operated. Justice comes to mind, but, again, there is much more. Spend some time really learning and understanding who Lincoln was.

Think about yourself and what it is you want to accomplish in your life. Think about the things you care about and what it is, in particular, you might want to engage in for the betterment of your community, your state, your country, or even your world. Do some research to make sure you understand your issue.

Write an essay answering the question asked above. Essays will be judged on a combination of understanding the material and good writing. So start early. Check your punctuation and make sure your tenses are consistent. It may require several rounds of editing and rewriting to produce the best essay. This is the essence of good writing.
